MARK OF THE TRAITOR

VISIONS OF CHAOS

Since its earliest conception, the Warhammer 40,000 universe has been a place in which nightmarish horror has abounded. The armies of Chaos lurk amongst the stars, emerging from the warp to fix their hateful gaze upon the worlds of the Imperium. These agents of the Dark Gods are driven by a desire to see the galaxy burn, and for more than three decades their campaigns of terror have been brought to life in stunning pieces of art. Any celebration of the forces of Chaos must surely include a gallery of these artworks, for they have given us a glimpse into the insane nature of the immaterium, as well as the tyrannical, brutal and insidious warriors who serve the Ruinous Powers.

The art of the Warhammer 40,000 universe is both varied and unique, and has shown the corruptions of Chaos in all their breadth and depth. From the warped Imperial technology and iconography that marks the Heretic Astartes, to the uniquely twisted servants of each of the Dark Gods, the taint of Chaos is unmistakable. Using the emotions and desires of Humanity as their basis, these works depict the extremes to which individuals will go in their pursuit of power – their flesh becomes a canvas ready to be reworked so that they may better achieve their degenerate ends. Yet it is the looks of contempt and utter hatred in the faces of such individuals that is captured so well in these artworks. Here we see the inherent depravity of Chaos, the selfishness and self-loathing that consumes these warriors, as well as the implacable fury that makes them the most dangerous of the Imperium's manifold enemies.

From the Horus Heresy to the opening of the Great Rift, the corruptions of Chaos have been captured in all their horror. The Chaos Space Marines are shown to be twisted reflections of their Imperial counterparts, hellish figures possessed of the strength, skill and determination of the Adeptus Astartes, but whose souls are beyond any hope of redemption. We can see the vainglory of such a warrior captured in the ornateness of their armour, their cruelty in the sadistic modifications they have made to their weapons, and their rampant depravities in their physical grotesqueness and decrepitude.

Other works show the unwashed masses who have been swayed to the service of the Dark Gods. These depictions reveal the enormity of Chaos corruption, giving glimpses into the horrors that await those who – in their efforts to cast off the shackles of Imperial oppression – give themselves over to the Ruinous Powers. For these untold millions, no grand reward awaits, for they are but meat to clog the Imperial war-machine.

Yet perhaps the most nightmarish of all glimpses into the Realm of Chaos are those depicting Daemons. Each of these hideous entities is an extension of one of the Dark Gods' essence, and through profane rituals they are drawn through the veil of reality and into existence.

In their anarchic forms are the varied corruptions of the Ruinous Powers made manifest, and through their depictions we are given insight into the horrors that await those who are not eternally vigilant against the enemy without and the enemy within. They, along with the other servants of Chaos, are the ever-present threat pervading the 41st Millennium, and from them there is no refuge – there is only war.
